

ABSTRACT

A financial transaction payment system is provided which includes a consumer depository account maintained by a first financial institution holding funds on behalf of a consumer, and a payment card for conducting one or more transactions and incurring charges associated with each such transaction. The card is issued to the consumer by a second financial institution and is linked to the depository account maintained at said first institution for covering the charges incurred on the card.